Political Activities

NOTE: This is general information. Each situation is different. Please contact the legal office for more information about your particular situation

Active duty military personnel and Department of Defense civilian employees are encouraged to carry out the obligations of citizenship by exercising their constitutional right to vote. As employees of the federal government, however, there are certain restrictions on political activities.

For active duty personnel, the general rule is that a member may not participate in "partisan political activities." When it comes to fundraisers, rallies, and conventions, that rule prohibits pretty much anything but mere attendance. Of course, members should not attend in uniform.

The rules also limit publishing political articles, letters or endorsements. Letters to the editor expressing personal opinions are permissible so long as they are not directed at the success or failure of a political party, partisan political candidate, campaign, group or cause. You cannot send letters as part of an organized letter-writing campaign, or solicitation of votes for or against a party, candidate, or partisan cause. These rules still apply to social media. In short, a member can "like" something or someone on social media or express his or her views on a subject, but is prohibited from sharing the item with others or indicating DOD endorsement.

Finally, members are permitted to display appropriate bumper stickers, but large partisan political signs are not allowed. Material on a bumper sticker or in a social media post that violates the Uniform Code of Military Justice or service regulation is still subject to disciplinary action. That means steer clear of messages that show contempt for public officials, release sensitive information, or contain unprofessional material or material prejudicial to good order and discipline.

The above summary is not exhaustive. There is an entire Department of Defense directive on this subject, so be mindful of political activities and check with your local legal office when in doubt.

For DOD civilian employees, political activities are regulated by a number of sources including a federal law called the Hatch Act.

DOD civilian employees, except Further Restricted Employees, are allowed to volunteer with a political campaign or political organization while in their personal capacities. These employees are however, prohibited from soliciting or receiving political contributions.

As with many restrictions on use of the federal workplace, federal employees may never engage in political activities while on duty or in a federal building. This means that employees may not send or forward political emails or post political messages to social media while in a federal building (including when off duty), even if the employee is using his or her personal smart phone, tablet or computer. Further guidance can be obtained from local legal offices.
